PRIMUS for Product teams, explained simply

You run a startup. Your company has shares, like a pizza cut into 100,000 slices. You keep 60,000. The better your company does, the more each slice is worth. That is your score: your slices × the final price + your money.

Your sector

At 21:00 the lottery puts you in a squad (you, a consulting firm and an investment fund) and gives your squad a sector: Luxury, FMCG or Energy. Everything you do tonight comes from that sector. You'll see it as a coloured badge at the top of every page.

The three rounds

1. Round 1 · Build (21:10–22:00). Write your PRD: your startup's plan, in seven short parts, up to 800 words. A robot judge marks it out of 100. Good marks = a higher starting price. Then answer investors' questions.
2. Round 2 · Four crises (22:45–04:45). Four times, a crisis card arrives: something bad happens to your company and every price falls 5%. Each time:
   - hire a consulting firm in the first 20 minutes (offer them money or slices; they can say yes, no or ask for more);
   - write your response plan (up to 500 words) before the due time, using your firm's advice;
   - rate your firm 1 to 5 stars. A good plan pushes your price up; a weak or missing one pushes it down.
3. Round 3 · The final problem (04:45–06:30). In the draft you pick a problem statement from your sector, lowest score so far first, 20 seconds each. Then hire a firm and write your solution together. Companies on the same statement compete: the best gets the biggest price rise.

Tips

- Your Home page says "Do this now" with a countdown. Do that.
- The step row at the top shows where you are in each crisis.
- When a crisis arrives your card shows up big on screen. Read it carefully: your plan must answer it.
